

"Would you rather" is a simple party game that can be played between friends. In this game, one player chooses a question or "prompt" to ask the group. The players must choose between either option A or option B inside the prompt. Would you rather questions are multiple-choice in nature. These would you rather questions for kids are clean, easy to understand, and fun to respond to.

How to Play

In order to play, print the would you rather questions below. And have one kid pick from the list of questions. The child who picked the question should read the question loudly to the group. The group should respond with their choice inside the multiple-choice options.

This game acts as a type of conversation starter. Often leading to more discussion in the group. These questions can be customized to meet each kid's requests. Here are some ways to customize the would you rather game.

Begin with, "Would you rather go"

Start the prompt with "would you rather go," and then finish it with a multiple-choice answer. For example, "Would you rather go to space or go underwater?"

And, "Would you rather live"

Begin the prompt with "would you rather live," and then finish it with a multiple-choice answer. For example, "Would you rather live by the ocean or by the mountains?"

Or start with, "Would you rather eat"

Start the prompt with "would you rather eat," and then finish it with a multiple-choice answer. For example, "Would you rather eat worms or eat feces?"

And lastly, "Would you rather never" to start

Say to the other player, "Would you rather never eat again or never use the bathroom again?" Starting the multiple-choice question with this prompt is a great way to construct a fun question.
