

Looking for would you rather questions? The "would you rather" game is a classic parlor game played amongst friends. This game is played with a minimum of two players. The players ask each other, "Would you rather." Followed by a multiple-choice prompt or question. Each player must pick one or the other prompt.

Why Play "Would You Rather?"

"Would you rather" is a fun parlor game that starts conversations. And allows friends to get to know one another. Would you rather questions are perfect for first dates, couples, friends, best friends, colleagues, and more.

To start, get a would you rather question or list of questions. Then ask a friend, "Which rather questions would you like to try?" Share the list with them. Pick a minimum of twenty questions. And then begin.

Where to play the game

Ask "would you rather questions" at a party. Or on a first date. These questions can be great ways to start a conversation and build chemistry. The best way to play is to gather a group of friends together in a circle. And have each player ask the question. Then in a round-table format, have each player respond with the answer to the question. In this format, each player can get to know each other.

Rules of the game

Rules are simple. Each player has to answer with either the first or second prompt. A player cannot "skip" a turn. Once each player has answered with their first or second prompt after "would you rather." Then the round is complete. Continue playing until at least twenty-one questions have been asked. Each player has one choice to make after the prompt. And the "would you rather questions" from the list below contain a multiple-choice option. A player cannot choose "nothing." If a player decides they don't want to respond, they should get ejected or eliminated.

Creating Your Own Questions

Creating your own questions is a fun way to play. Here is the best way to create questions. Start with the easiest prompts. They usually contain the following. It's never a good idea to prompt people with questions that could surface bad memories. Or bring up negative thoughts. Try to make the game fun. And use good judgment when designing a prompt. For everyone to have a good time, the questions must be innocent and thought-provoking. Give it a try!

Begin with, "Would you rather go"

Start the prompt with "would you rather go," and then finish it with a multiple-choice answer. For example, "Would you rather go to space or go underwater?"

And, "Would you rather live"

Begin the prompt with "would you rather live," and then finish it with a multiple-choice answer. For example, "Would you rather live by the ocean or by the mountains?"

Or start with, "Would you rather eat"

Start the prompt with "would you rather eat," and then finish it with a multiple-choice answer. For example, "Would you rather eat worms or eat feces?"

And lastly, "Would you rather never" to start

Say to the other player, "Would you rather never eat again or never use the bathroom again?"

Starting the multiple-choice question with this prompt is a great way to construct a fun question.
